National Philanthropy: Robbie Page Kickball Tournament

On another sunny, fall weekend, the Alpha Upsilon chapter of James Madison University had their annual Robbie Page Kickball Tournament. Robbie Page is the national philanthropy for Sigma Sigma Sigma that supports therapeutic play for terminally ill children. All proceeds from the tournament are donated to this organization. Each member created a team of ten from different organizations all across JMU and had them pay 10 dollars each to purchase a cool shirt with a Robbie Page logo and a chance to compete in a fun kickball tournament held at a field behind an elementary school. With the help of their philanthropy chair Julia Lucey, and the Robbie Page Philanthropy heads Morgan Welch, Maddie Szoka, and Ashley Johnson, they managed to raise over $5,000! The winner of the tournament won some food and everyone was offered to buy raffle tickets for cool baskets that were auctioned off. There were also a campus cookies proceeds table and pizza sold to raise money as well! These girls did a remarkable job with organizing, planning, and creating this event and it ran very smoothly. Everyone had a fantastic time playing kickball and were happy knowing they were helping children have a better day than usual.
